

THE SECOND SPRING.

A SERMON,

BY JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, D. D.

EX LIBRIS
REV. C. W. SULLIVAN
BRAYTON

THE SECOND SPRING.

A SERMON

PREACHED IN THE SYNOD OF OSCOTT,

ON TUESDAY, JULY 13TH, 1852.

BY

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, D.D.,

PRESIDENT OF THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF IRELAND, AND PRIEST OF THE ORATORY OF S. PHILIP NERI.

EX. LIBRIS
REV. C. W. SULLIVAN
BRAMPTON

LONDON:

THOMAS RICHARDSON AND SON,
152, FLEET STREET; 9, CAPEL STREET, DUBLIN; AND DERBY.

MDCCLII.

TO THE FATHERS OF THE SYNOD OF OSCOTT,
TO THE CLERGY WHO ASSISTED AT IT,
WHO, IN THE STRENGTH OF THE MOST HIGH,
HAVE BEGUN A WORK
WHICH IS TO LIVE AFTER THEM,
THE FOLLOWING SERMON,
PREACHED UNDER THE ILLUMINATION OF THEIR PRESENCE, IS HUMBLY AND AFFECTIONATELY INSCRIBED
BY THEIR DEVOTED SERVANT IN CHRIST,
THE AUTHOR.

Oscott,
In Fide E. M. V. de Monte Carmelo,
MDCCLII.

A SERMON.

“ARISE, MAKE HASTE, MY LOVE, MY DOVE, MY BEAUTIFUL ONE, AND COME. FOR THE WINTER IS NOW PAST, THE RAIN IS OVER AND GONE. THE FLOWERS HAVE APPEARED IN OUR LAND.”

Words taken from the second chapter of Solomon's Canticle of Canticles.

WE have familiar experience of the order, the constancy, the perpetual renovation of the material world which surrounds us. Frail and transitory as is every part of it, restless and migratory as are its elements, never-ceasing as are its changes, still it abides. It is bound together by a law of permanence, it is set up in unity; and, though it is ever dying, it is ever coming to life again. Dissolution does but give birth to fresh modes of organization, and one death is the parent of a thousand lives. Each hour, as it comes, is but a testimony, how fleeting, yet how secure, how certain, is the great whole. It is like an image on the waters, which is ever the same, though the waters ever flow. Change upon change,—yet one change cries out to another, like the Seraphim, alternately, in praise and in glory of their Maker. The sun sinks to rise again; the day is swallowed up in the gloom of night, to be born out of it, as fresh as if it had never been quenched. Spring passes into summer, and through summer and autumn into winter, only the more surely, by its own ultimate return, to triumph over that grave, towards which it resolutely hastened from its first hour. We mourn over the blossoms of May, because they are to wither; but we know, withal, that May is one day to have its revenge upon Novembér, by the revolution of that solemn circle which never stops, which teaches us in our height of hope, ever to be sober, and in our depth of desolation, never to despair.

And forcibly as this comes home to every one of us, not less forcible is the contrast which exists between this material world, so vigorous, so reproductive amid all its changes, and the moral world, so feeble, so downward, so resourceless amid all its aspirations. That which ought to come to nought, endures; that which promises a future, disappoints and is no more. The same sun shines in heaven from first to last; and the blue firmament, the everlasting mountains, reflect his rays; but where is there upon earth the champion, the hero, the lawgiver, the body politic, the sovereign race, which was great three hundred years ago, and is great now? Moralists and poets, often do they descant upon this innate vitality of matter, this innate perishableness of mind. Man rises to fall: he tends to dissolution the moment he begins to be; he lives on, indeed, in his children, he lives on in his name, he lives not on in his own person. He is, as regards the manifestations of his nature here below, as a bubble that breaks, and as water poured out upon the earth. He was young, he is old, he is never young again. It is the lament over him, poured forth in verse and in prose, by Christians and by heathen. The greatest work of God's hands under the sun, he, in all the manifestations of his complex being, is born only to die.

His bodily frame first begins to feel the power of this constraining law, though it is the last to succumb to it. We look at the bloom of youth with interest, yet with pity; and the more graceful and sweet it is, with pity so much the more; for, whatever be its excellence and its glory, soon it begins to be deformed and dishonoured by the very force of its living on. It grows into exhaustion and collapse, till at length it crumbles into that dust out of which it was originally taken.

So is it, too, with our moral being, a far higher and diviner portion of our natural constitution; it begins with life, it ends with what is worse than the mere loss of life, with a living death. How beautiful is the human heart, when it puts forth its first leaves, and opens, and rejoices in its spring-tide. Fair as may be the bodily form, fairer far, in its green foliage and bright blossoms, is natural virtue. It blooms in the young, like some rich flower, so delicate, so fragrant, and so dazzling. Generosity, and lightness of heart, and amiableness,—the confiding spirit, the gentle temper, the elastic cheerfulness, the open hand, the pure affection, the noble aspiration, the heroic resolve, the romantic pursuit, the love in which self has no part,—are not these beautiful? and are they not dressed up and put out for admiration in their best shapes, in tales and in poems? and ah! what a prospect of good is there! who could believe that it is to fade! and yet, as night follows upon day, as decrepitude follows upon health, so surely are failure, and overthrow, and annihilation the issue of this natural virtue, if time only be allowed it to run its course. There are those who are cut off in the first opening of this excellence, and then, if we may trust their epitaphs, they have lived like angels; but wait a while, let them live on, let the course of life proceed, let the bright soul go through the fire and water of the world's temptations, and seductions, and corruptions, and transformations; and, alas! for the insufficiency of nature, alas for its powerlessness to persevere, its waywardness in disappointing its own promise! Wait till youth has become age; and not more different is the miniature which we have of him when a boy, when every feature spoke of hope, put side by side of the large portrait painted to his honour, when he is old, when his limbs are shrunk, his eye dim, his brow furrowed, and his hair grey, than differs the moral grace of that boyhood from the forbidding and repulsive aspect of his soul, now that he has lived to the age of man. For moroseness, and cynicism, and selfishness, is the ordinary winter of that spring.

EX. LIBRIS
REV. C. W. SULLIVAN
BRAMPTON

Such is man in his own nature, and such, too, is he in his works. The noblest efforts of his genius, the conquests he has made, the expansive influence he has exerted, the nations he has civilized, the states he has created, they outlive himself, they outlive him by many centuries, but they tend to an end, and that end is dissolution. Powers of the world, sovereignties, dynasties, sooner or later come to nought; they have their fatal hour. The Roman conqueror shed tears over Carthage, for in the destruction of the rival city he discerned too truly an augury of the fall of Rome; and at length with the weight and the responsibilities, the crimes and the glories of centuries upon centuries, the Imperial City fell.

Thus man and all his works are mortal; they die, and they have no power of renovation.

But what is it, my Fathers, my Brothers, what is it that has happened in England just at this time? Something strange is passing over this land, by the very surprise, by the very commotion, which it excites. Were we not near enough the scene of action to be able to say what is going on,—were we the inhabitants of some sister planet possessed of a more perfect mechanism than this earth has discovered for surveying the transactions of another globe,—and did we turn our eyes thence towards England just at this season, we should be arrested by a political phenomenon as wonderful as any which the astronomer notes down from his physical field of view. It would be the appearance of a national commotion, almost without parallel, more violent than has happened here for centuries,—at least in the judgments and intentions of men, if not in act and deed. We should note it down, that soon after St. Michael's day, 1850, a storm arose in the moral world, so furious as to demand some great explanation, and to rouse our intense desire to gain it. We should observe it increasing from day to day, and spreading from place to place, without remission, almost without lull, up to this very day, when perhaps it threatens worse still, at least gives no sure prospect of alleviation. Every party in the body politic undergoes its influence,—from the Queen upon her throne, down to the little ones in the infant or day-school. The ten thousands of the constituency, the sum total of Protestant sects, the aggregate of religious societies and associations, the great body of established clergy in town and country, the bar, even the medical profession, nay, even the circle of literary men, every class, every interest, every fireside, gives tokens of this ubiquitous storm. This would be our report of it, seeing it from the distance, and we should speculate on the cause. What is it all about? against what is it directed? what wonder has happened upon earth? what prodigious, what preternatural event is adequate to the burden of so vast an effect?

We should judge rightly in our curiosity about such a phenomenon; it must be a portentous event, and such it is. It is an innovation, a miracle, I may say, in the course of human events. The physical world revolves year by year; but the political order of things does not renew itself, does not return; it continues, but it proceeds; there is no retrogression. This is so well understood by men of the day, that with them progress is idolized as another name for good. The past never returns—it is never a good;—if we are to escape existing ills, it must be by going forward. The past is out of date; the past is dead. As well may the dead live to us, as well may the dead profit us, as the past return. This, then, is the cause of this national transport, this national cry, which encompasses us. The past has returned, the dead lives. Thrones are overturned, and are never restored; States live and die, and then are matter only for history. Babylon was great, and Tyre, and Egypt, and Nineveh, and shall never be great again. The English Church was, and the English Church was not, and the English Church is once again. This is the portent, worthy of a cry. It is the coming in of a Second Spring; it is a restoration in the moral world, such as that which yearly takes place in the physical.

Three centuries ago, and the Catholic Church, that great creation of God's power, stood in this land in pride of place. It had the honours of near 1000 years upon it; it was enthroned in some twenty sees up and down the broad country; it was based in the will of a faithful people; it energized through ten thousand instruments of power and influence; and it was ennobled by a host of Saints and Martyrs. The churches, one by one, recounted and rejoiced in the line of glorified intercessors, who were the respective objects of their grateful homage. Canterbury alone numbered perhaps some sixteen, from St. Augustine to St. Dunstan and St. Elphege, from St. Anselm and St. Thomas down to St. Edmund. York had its St. Paulinus, St. John, St. Wilfrid, and St. William; London its St. Erconwald: Durham its St. Cuthbert; Winton its St. Swithun. Then there was St. Aidan of Lindisfarne, and St. Hugh of Lincoln, and St. Chad of Lichfield, and St. Thomas of Hereford, and St. Oswald and St. Wulstan of Worcester, and St. Osmund of Salisbury, and St. Birinus of Dorchester, and St. Richard of Chichester. And then too, its religious Orders, its monastic establishments, its universities, its wide relations all over Europe, its high prerogatives in the temporal state, its wealth, its dependencies, its popular honours,—where was there in the whole of Christendom a more glorious hierarchy? Mixed up with the civil institutions, with king and nobles, with the people, found in every village and in every town,—it seemed destined to stand, so long as England stood, and to outlast, it might be, England's greatness.

But it was the high decree of Heaven, that the majesty of that presence should be blotted out. It is a long story, my Fathers and Brothers,—you know it well. I need not go through it. The vivifying principle of truth, the shadow of St. Peter, the grace of the Redeemer, left it. That old Church on its day became a corpse (a marvellous, an awful change!), and then it did but corrupt the air which once it refreshed, and cumber the ground which once it beautified. So all seemed to be lost; and there was a struggle for a time, and then its priests were cast out, or martyred. There were sacrileges innumerable. Its temples were profaned or destroyed; its revenues seized by covetous nobles, or squandered upon the ministers of a new faith. The presence of Catholicism was at length simply removed,—its grace disowned,—its power despised,—its name, except as a matter of history, at length, almost unknown. It took a long while to do this thoroughly; much time, much thought, much labour, much expense; but at last it was done. Oh, that miserable day, centuries before we were born! What a martyrdom to live in it, and see the fair form of Truth, moral and material, hacked piecemeal, and every limb and organ carried off and burned in the fire, or cast into the deep! But at last the work was done. Truth was disposed of, and shovelled away, and there was a calm, a silence, a sort of peace;—and such was about the state of things when we were born into this weary world.

My Fathers and Brothers, you have seen it on one side, and some of us on another; but one and all of us can bear witness to the fact of the utter contempt into which Catholicism had fallen by the time that we were born. You, alas, know it far better than I can know it; but it may not be out of place, if by one or two tokens, as by the strokes of a pencil, I bear witness to you from without, of what you can witness so much more truly from within. No longer the Catholic Church in the country; nay, no longer, I may say, a Catholic community;—but a few adherents of the Old Religion, moving silently and sorrowfully about, as memorials of what had been. “The Roman Catholics;”—not a sect even,—not an interest,—not, as men conceived of it, a body, however small, representative of the Great Communion abroad,—but a mere handful of individuals, who might be counted, like the pebbles and debris of the great deluge, and who, forsooth, merely happened to retain opinions, which, in their day, were the profession of a Church. Here a set of poor Irishmen, coming and going at harvest time, or a colony of them lodged in a miserable quarter of the vast metropolis. There, perhaps an elderly person, seen walking in the streets, grave and solitary, and strange, though noble in bearing, and said to be of good family, and—a “Roman Catholic.” An old-fashioned house of gloomy appearance, closed in with high walls, with an iron gate, and yews, and the report attaching to it that “Roman Catholics” lived there; but who they were, or what they did, or what was meant by calling them Roman Catholics, no one could tell;—though it had an unpleasant sound, and told of form and superstition. And then, perhaps, as we went to and fro, looking with a boy’s curious eyes through the great city, we might come to-day upon some Moravian chapel, or Quakers’ meeting-house, and to-morrow on a chapel of the “Roman Catholics;” but nothing was to be gathered from it, except that there were lights burning there, and some boys in white, swinging censers; and what it all meant could only be learned from books, from Protestant Histories, and Sermons, and they did not report well of “the Roman Catholics,” but, on the contrary, deposed that they had once had power, and had abused it. And then, again, we might, on one occasion hear it pointedly put out by some literary man, as the result of his careful investigation, and as a recondite point of information which few knew, that there was this difference between the Roman Catholics of England, and the Roman Catholics of Ireland, that the latter had bishops, and the former were governed by four officials, called Vicars Apostolic.

Such was about the sort of knowledge possessed of Christianity by the heathens of old time, who persecuted its adherents from the face of the earth, and then called them a gens lucifuga, a people who shunned the light of day. Such were Catholics in England, found in corners, and alleys, and cellars, and the housetops, or in the recesses of the country; cut off from the populous world around them, and dimly seen as if through a mist or in twilight, as ghosts flitting to and fro, by the high Protestants, the lords of the earth. At length so feeble did they become, so utterly contemptible, that contempt gave birth to pity, and the more generous of their tyrants actually began to wish to bestow on them some favour, under the notion that their opinions were simply too absurd ever to spread again, and that they themselves, were they but raised in civil importance, would soon unlearn and be ashamed of them. And thus out of mere kindness to us, they began to blasphem our doctrines to the Protestant world, that so our very idiotey might be our plea for mercy.

A great change, an awful contrast, between the time-honoured Church of St. Augustine and St. Thomas, and the poor remnant of their children in the beginning of the nineteenth century! It was a miracle, I might say, to pull down that lordly power; but there was a greater and truer one in store. No one could prophecy its fall,—but still less would any one have ventured to prophesy its rise again. The fall was wonderful; still after all it was in the order of nature;—all things come to nought: its rise again would be a different sort of wonder, for it is in the order of grace,—and who can hope for miracles, and such a miracle as this? Has the whole course of history a like to show? I must speak cautiously and according to my knowledge, but I recollect no parallel to it. Augustine, indeed, came to the same island to which the early missionaries had come already; but they came to Britons, and he to Saxons. The Arian Goths and Lombards too, cast off their heresy. in St. Augustine's age, and joined the Church; but they had never fallen away from her. The inspired word seems to imply the almost impossibility of such a grace as the renovation of those who have crucified to themselves again, and trodden under foot the Son of God. Who then could have dared to hope that, out of so sacrilegious a nation as this is, a people would have been formed again, unto their Saviour? What signs did it show that it was to be singled out from among the nations? Had it been prophesied some fifty years ago, would not the very notion have seemed preposterous and wild?

My Fathers, there was one of your own order, then in the maturity of his powers and his reputation. His name is the property of this diocese; yet is too great, too venerable, too dear to all Catholics, to be confined to any part of England, when it is rather a household word in the mouths of all of us. What would have been the feelings of that venerable man, the champion of God's ark in an evil time, could he have lived to see this day? It is almost presumptuous for one who knew him not, to draw pictures about him, and his thoughts, and his friends, some of whom are even here present; yet am I wrong in fancying that a day such as this, in which we stand, would have seemed to him a dream, or if he prophesied of it, to his hearers nothing but a mockery? Say that one time, wrapt in spirit, he had reached forward to the future, and that his mortal eye had wandered from that lowly chapel in the valley which had been for centuries in the possession of Catholics, to the neighbouring height, then waste and solitary. And let him say to those about him,—“I see a bleak mount, looking upon an open country, over against that huge town. to whose inhabitants Catholicism is of so little account. I see the ground marked out, and an ample enclosure made; and plantations are rising there, clothing and circling in the space. And there on that high spot, far from the haunts of men, yet in the very centre of the island, a large edifice, or rather pile of edifices, appears, with many fronts and courts, and long cloisters and corridors, and story upon story. And there it rises under the invocation of the same sweet and powerful Name, which has been our strength and consolation in the Valley. I look more attentively at that building, and I see it is fashioned upon that ancient style of art which brings back the past, which had seemed to be perishing from off the face of the earth, or to be preserved only as a curiosity, or to be imitated only as a fancy. I listen, and I hear the sound of voices, grave and musical, renewing the old chant, with which Augustine greeted Ethelbert in the free air upon the Kentish strand. It comes from a long procession, and it winds along the cloisters. Priests and religious, theologians from the schools, and canons from the Cathedral, walk in due precedence. And then there comes a vision of well nigh twelve mitred heads; and last I see a Prince of the Church, in the royal dye of empire and of martyrdom, a pledge to us from Rome of Rome's unwearied love, a token that that goodly company is firm in Apostolic faith and hope. And the shadow of the Saints is there;—St. Benedict is there, speaking to us by the voice of bishop and of priest, and counting; over the long ages through which he has prayed, and studied, and laboured; there too is St. Dominic's white wool, which no blemish can impair, no stain can dim:— and if St. Bernard be not there, it is only that his absence may make him be remembered more. And the princely patriarch, St. Ignatius, too, the St. George of the modern world, with his chivalrous lance run through his writhing foe, he, too, sheds his blessing upon that train. And others, also, his equals or his juniors in time, whose pictures are above our altars, or soon shall be, the surest proof that the Lord's arm has not waxen short, nor His mercy failed,—they, too, are looking down from their thrones on high upon the throng. And so that high company moves on into the holy place; and there with august rite and awful sacrifice, inaugurates the great act which brings it thither." What is that act? it is the first Synod of a new Hierarchy; it is the resurrection of the Church.

O my Fathers, my Brothers, had that revered Bishop so spoken then, who that had heard him but would have said that he spoke what could not be? What! those few scattered worshippers, the Roman Catholics, to form a Church! Shall the past be rolled back? Shall the grave open? Shall the Saxons live again to God? Shall the shepherds, watching their flocks by night, be visited by a multitude of the heavenly army, and hear how that their Lord has been new born in their own city? Yes; for grace can, where nature cannot. The world grows old, but the Church is ever young. She can, in any time, at her Lord's will, "inherit the Gentiles, and inhabit the desolate cities." "Arise, Jerusalem, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. Behold, darkness shall cover the earth, and a mist the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and His glory shall be seen upon thee. Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all these are gathered together; they come to thee: thy sons shall come from afar, and thy daughters shall rise up at thy side." "Arise, make haste, my love, my dove, my beautiful one, and come. For the winter is now past, and the rain is over and gone. The flowers have appeared in our land.....the fig-tree hath put forth her green figs; the vines in flower yield their sweet smell. Arise, my love, my beautiful one, and come." It is the time for thy visitation. Arise, Mary, and go forth in thy strength into that north country, which once was thine own, and take possession of a land which knows thee not. Arise, Mother of God, and with thy thrilling voice speak to those who labour with child, and are in pain, till the babe of grace leaps within them! Shine on us, dear Lady, with thy bright countenance, like the sun in his strength, O stella matutina, O harbinger of peace, till our year is one perpetual May. From thy sweet eyes, from thy pure smile, from thy majestic brow, let ten thousand influences rain forth, not to confound or overwhelm, but to persuade, to win over thine enemies. O Mary, my hope, O Mother undefiled, fulfil to us the promise of this Spring. A second Temple rises on the ruins of the old. Canterbury has gone its way, and York is gone, and Durham is gone, and Winchester is gone. It was sore to part with them. We clung to the vision of past greatness, and would not believe it would come to nought; but the Church in England has died, and the Church lives again. Westminster and Nottingham, Beverley and Hexham, Northampton and Shrewsbury, if the world lasts, shall be names as musical to the ear, as stirring to the heart, as the glories we have lost; and Saints shall rise out of them, if God will, and Doctors once again shall give the law to Israel, and Preachers call to penance and to justice, as at the beginning.

Yes, my Fathers and Brothers, and if it be God's blessed will, not Saints alone, nor Doctors only, not Preachers only, shall be ours,—but Martyrs too, shall re-consecrate the soil to God. We know not what is before us, ere we win our own; we are engaged in a great, a joyful work, but in proportion to God's grace is the fury of His enemies. They have welcomed us as the lion greets his prey. Perhaps they may be familiarized in time with our appearance, but perhaps they may be irritated the more. To set up the Church again in England is too great an act to be done in a corner. We have had reason to expect, that such a boon would not be given to us without a cross. It is not God's way that great blessings should descend without the sacrifice first of great sufferings. If the truth is to be spread to any wide extent among the people, how can we dream how can we hope, that trial and trouble shall not accompany its going forth? And we have already, if it may be said without presumption, to commence our work withal, a large store of merits. We have no slight outfit for our opening warfare. Can we religiously say it, that the blood of our martyrs three centuries ago and since, shall never receive its recompense? Those priests, secular and regular, did they suffer for no end? or rather, for an end which is not yet accomplished? The long imprisonment, the fetid dungeon, the weary suspense, the tyrannous trial, the barbarous sentence, the savage execution, the rack, the gibbet, the knife, the caldron, the numberless tortures of those holy victims, O my God, are they to have no reward? Are Thy martyrs to cry from under thine altar for their loving vengeance on this guilty people, and to cry in vain? Shall they lose life, and not gain a better life for the children of those who persecuted them? Is this Thy way, O my God, righteous and true? Is it according to Thy promise, O King of saints, if I may dare talk to Thee of justice? Did not Thou Thyself pray for Thine enemies upon the cross, and convert them? Did not Thy first Martyr win Thy great Apostle, then a persecutor, by his loving prayer? And in that day of trial and desolation for England, when hearts were pierced through and through with Mary's woe, at the crucifixion of Thy body mystical, was not every tear that flowed, and every drop of blood that was shed, the seeds of a future harvest, when they who sowed in sorrow were to reap in joy?

And as that suffering of the Martyrs is not yet recompensed, so, perchance, it is not yet exhausted. Something, for what we know, remains to be undergone, to complete the necessary sacrifice. May God forbid it, for this poor nation's sake! but still, could we be surprised, my Fathers and my Brothers, if the winter even now should not yet be quite over? Have we any right to take it strange, if, in this English land, the spring-time of the Church should turn out an English spring; an uncertain anxious time of hope and fear, of joy and suffering,—of bright promise and budding hopes, yet, withal, of keen blasts, and cold showers, and sudden storms?

One thing alone I know, that according to our need, so will be our strength. One thing I am sure of; that the more the enemy rages against us, so much the more will the Saints in Heaven plead for us; the more fearful are our trials from the world, the more present to us will be our Mother Mary, and our good Patrons and Angel Guardians; the more malicious are the devices of men against us, the louder cry of supplication will ascend from the bosom of the whole Church to God for us. We shall not be left orphans; we shall have within us the strength of the Paraclete, promised to the Church and to every member of it. My Fathers, my Brothers in the Priesthood, I speak from my heart, when I declare my conviction, that there is no one among you here present, but, if God so willed, would readily become a martyr for His sake. I do not say you would wish it; I do not say that the natural will would not pray that that chalice might pass away; I do not speak of what you can do by any strength of yours;—but in the strength of God, by the grace of the Spirit, in the armour of justice, by the consolations and peace of the Church, by the blessing of the Apostles Peter and Paul, and in the Name of Christ, you would do what nature cannot do. By the intercession of the Saints on high, by the penances and good works, and the prayers of the people of God on earth, you could be forcibly borne up as upon the waves of the mighty deep, and carried out of yourselves by the fulness of grace, whether nature wished it or no. I do not mean violently, or with unseemly struggle, but calmly, gracefully, sweetly, joyously, you would mount up and ride forth to the battle, as on the rush of Angel's wings, as your fathers did before you, and gained the prize. You, who day by day offer up the Immaculate Lamb of God, you who hold in your hands the Incarnate Word, under the visible tokens which He has ordained, you who again and again drain the chalice of the Great Victim; who is to make you fear? what is to startle you? what to seduce you? who is to stop you, whether you are to suffer or to do, whether to lay the foundations of the Church in tears, or to put the crown upon the work in joy?

My Fathers, my Brothers, one word more. It may seem as if I were going out of my way in thus addressing you; but I have some sort of a plea to urge in extenuation. When the English College at Rome was set up by the solicitude of a great Pontiff in the beginning of England's sorrows, and missionaries were trained there for confessorship and martyrdom here, who was it that saluted the fair Saxon youths as they passed by him in the streets of the great City, with the salutation "Salvete flores martyrum?" And when the time came for each in turn to leave that peaceful home and go forth to the conflict, to whom did they go before leaving Rome, to receive a blessing which was to nerve them for their work? They went for a saint's blessing; they went to a calm old man, who had never seen blood, except in penance; who had longed indeed to die for Christ, what time the great St. Francis opened the way to the far East, but who had been fixed as if a sentinel in the holy city, and walked up and down for fifty years on one beat, while his brethren were in the battle. Oh the fire of that heart, too great for its frail tenement, which tormented him to be kept at home when the whole church was at war! and therefore came those bright-haired strangers to him, ere they set out for the scene of their passion, that the full zeal and love pent up in that burning breast might find a vent, and flow over, from him who was kept at home, upon those who were to face the foe. Therefore one by one, each in his turn, those youthful soldiers came to the old man; and one by one they persevered and gained the crown and the palm,—all but one, who had not gone, and would not go, for the salutary blessing.

My Fathers, my Brothers, that old man was my own St. Philip. Bear with me for his sake. If I have spoken too seriously, his sweet smile shall temper it. As he was with you three centuries ago in Rome, when our Temple fell, so now surely when it is rising, it is a pleasant token, that he has even set out on his travels to you; and that, as if remembering how he interceded for you at home, and recognising the relations he then formed with you, he now wishes to have a name among you, and to be loved by you, and perchance to do you a service, here in your own land.

Dedicated to His Eminence Cardinal Wiseman.

MEDITATIONS
ON ALL THE MYSTERIES OF THE FAITH:

TOGETHER WITH

A TREATISE ON MENTAL PRAYER,

BY THE VEN. FATHER LOUIS DE PONTE, S. J.

BEING THE TRANSLATION FROM THE ORIGINAL SPANISH,

BY JOHN HEIGHAM.

REVISED AND CORRECTED. IN SIX VOLS.

TO WHICH ARE ADDED,

THE MEDITATIONS ON THE SACRED HEART OF JESUS.

BY THE VEN. F. C. BURGOS, S. J.

TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH.—PRICE 3s.

"We welcome this first volume of a translation of the celebrated Meditations of De Ponte with great pleasure. Those Meditations go through the entire course of the mysteries of the Catholic Faith, in the most copious and admirable manner, constituting probably the best development extant of the system of St. Ignatius in the Spiritual Exercises, and adapted, far beyond any similar work, to aid the Christian in the acquisition of the invaluable habit of mental prayer, besides being an almost inexhaustible stock for daily spiritual reading. The Fathers of the Society of Jesus, to whom, we believe, the public are indebted for this undertaking, could not possibly have made a better choice from among the abundant stores which the holiness of successive generations of saints has accumulated in that illustrious Order. It would be difficult to praise the translation (a carefully corrected reprint of the old one by Heigham) too highly. It is in good, plain, and forcible English, the apt expression of the deep spiritual thought which it conveys. We ought to add, that the quantity of matter supplied at such a price (3s. only) is surprising, and the volume is a model of neatness and finish in its editorial and typographical appearance."—Tablet.

Just Published, large 8vo. Price 2s.

Dedicated to the Right Hon. Lord John Russell,

PART II. OF THE

CONFERENCES OF THE REV. PERE LACORDAIRE.

ON THE VARIOUS SUBJECTS CONNECTED WITH THE DOCTRINES
&c. OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Delivered in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, in Paris,

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH

BY HENRY LANGDON.

To be completed in 10 Parts.

"His brilliant and sublime discourses to the elite of the learning of Paris, in the great cathedral of that city, are here rendered into English, by one who seems to have been fully sensible of the value and importance of the task he undertook, and to have discharged it honourably and successfully.....We cannot conclude our notice of the parts of this work which have already appeared, without expressing our admiration of the style in which it has been brought out. The paper, printing, and general mechanical and editorial execution of the work, render it a specimen of typographical excellence not every day to be met with."—Telegraph.

Published by Richardson and Son, 172, Fleet Street, 9, Capel Street, Dublin, and Derby.

3
3
2

Permissu Superiorum.

Now Ready.

A Concise History of the Cistercian Order, with the Lives of SS. Robert, Alberic, and Stephen; with its Revival at St. Susan's, Lullworth, and Mount St. Bernard, Leicestershire. A sketch of the Life of Thos. Weld, Esq. is embodied in the History of St. Susan's, Lullworth.

BY A CISTERCIAN MONK.

In a neat 8vo. volume of nearly 400 pages, on superfine paper, with four beautiful engravings on steel, bound in cloth, lettered with gold, price 5s.

The profits of the publication are to be appropriated to the completion of the Abbey of Mount St. Bernard.

Should the work meet with your kind approbation and encouragement, your subscription is respectfully solicited. Be pleased to send your names either to the Publishers, Messrs. Richardson and Son, 172, Fleet Street, London; 9, Capel Street, Dublin; and Derby; M. C. Dolman, 61, New Bond Street, and 22, Paternoster Row, London; or to the Abbey of Mount St. Bernard, Loughborough, Leicestershire.

J. Re Bernard Palmer.
Abbot.

Abbey of Mount St. Bernard, Leicestershire.
6th April, 1852.

To be published after the Synod of the Catholic Hierarchy of England,

A NEW EDITION OF

The Ritual,

For the use of the Catholic Church of England. In large 12mo. for pocket use, and in large 8vo. for use in Churches and Chapels.

This Edition will be carefully revised under the eye of authority, and will be got up with every attention to accuracy and Ecclesiastical propriety.

LONDON: RICHARDSON AND SON, 172, Fleet Street; 9, Capel Street, Dublin; and Derby; and THOMAS JONES, Paternoster Row, London.